Vermont Commons School is an independent college preparatory school in South Burlington, Vermont. At Vermont Commons, we believe in complete engagement. Through small classes, individualized curriculum, encouragement, and multi-disciplinary challenges, we engage students in academics, in the community, and most importantly, in the journey of self-discovery. We have a dedicated college counselor and offer a personalized college counseling process and our students go on to thrive at the colleges and universities of their choice.

A SAFE, SUPPORTIVE, RESPECTFUL ENVIRONMENT FOR STUDENTS TO EXPLORE WHO THEY ARE

Shana Wolfstein, Class of 2011, Stern College of Yeshiva University 2015

"I chose Vermont Commons School because I was impressed by the rigorous learning and the dynamic class discussions. I had a great time at Vermont Commons School and I feel really prepared for college. I would not have tried new things like hiking and volleyball without the support of the staff and teachers at Vermont Commons School. Vermont Commons School made me feel safe, like being at home. It is a place where I felt comfortable being myself and taking risks."

Mary Cotton, Class of 2000, College of Wooster 2004 and M.A. at Case Western Reserve University 2008

"Vermont Commons School is a place that honors individuals. Hans, Leah, Rob and Bob had a profound effect on my high school experience. They along with Cara and Pete created an environment that fostered growth and exploration. I will always cherish my time at Vermont Commons School and all the care they took in creating such a special place. I am always so happy to see how the tradition of individualism and exploration continues to be honored."

Jack Homer, Class of 2009, Carnegie Mellon University 2013

"At Vermont Commons School, I was used to school being challenging and when I got to college, the amount of work was the same. Many of my friends at Carnegie Mellon University said college was much harder than high school and were struggling to keep up. I became very comfortable writing papers at Vermont Commons School and I felt very prepared for college. Vermont Commons School is the foundation for how I think about myself."

Will Homer, Class of 2011, Reed College 2015

"You will find something at Vermont Commons School that engages you. All the teachers here are passionate about something, and they help you find out what you are passionate about."
